These mistakes made me learn a lot and understand the importance of self- learning.I took the most useful parts of all the certifications I have and made one more certification - it's L7 exam.I did this in a manner that I could understand all the materials better.Q: Perl script doesn't recognize correctly formatted date i am trying to format the date before printing the output. The script is for multi-record import: using the date format like 2015-08-24 and convert it to YMMDDhhmm format. the script recognize the day correctly but not the date and time part. here is the script: my $logfile_index = 1; while(my $line =) { chomp $line; if ($line =~ /^[0-9+)[-][0-9]{2}(\-[0-9]{2}) ([0-9]{2})$/) { print "$1;$2;$3 " if ($logfile_index == 1); $logfile_index = $logfile_index + 1; my $file_name = $1;

Ink jet printers have been used widely because of their quietness, low costs and high print quality. In ink jet printers, water-based ink compositions or oil-based ink compositions are generally employed. Since the water-based ink compositions need an aqueous solvent, a printing process involving the use of such compositions is disadvantageous in that the printing process requires drying of an image on an image-receiving material. Further, in the case of the oil-based ink compositions, images of poor water resistance are formed on image-receiving materials. For these reasons, a large number of thermal transfer systems employing, e.g., heat-sublimable dyes have been proposed in the art. Known inks for the thermal transfer systems are limited to dyes as coloring materials, and cannot be used as coloring materials for the ink jet printing processes. On the other hand, electrophotographic image-receiving materials are generally employed in electrophotographic printing processes. Electrophotographic image-receiving materials are required to have high printability, durability and good image fastness. The electrophotographic image-receiving materials are desired to have high resolution and excellent color separation properties. In order to solve these problems, the inventors have disclosed a thermal transfer sheet comprising a substrate sheet, an intermediate layer provided on the substrate sheet and containing a dye transfer agent which can be transferred to an image-receiving material by applying heat, and a surface layer having thermal releasability provided on the intermediate layer (Japanese Patent Laid-Open No. 14946/1988). The thermal transfer sheet of this type are advantageous over conventional thermal transfer sheets in that they provide images having excellent color density and sharpness, and also have excellent durability. However, it has been found that the dye transfer images formed on the image-receiving materials by the thermal transfer system described above tend
