The Heidelberg Kord 64 is a one-color, sheet-fed offset printing machine made by Heidelberg of Germany. The machine was produced from 1963-1989 and the last machines were made in the factory. The Kord line is a newer Heidelberg line and is basically a sheet fed offset printing machine with a variable impression or gage position. In a nutshell, the Kord line is essentially a small version of the Suprasetter 74. There are several notable features and differences between the Kord and the Suprasetter. In the Suprasetter 74, the impression drum is made from aluminum and turns on spindles. The Kord 64 uses a hydrostatic drive for the impression drum. The drum is polytetrafluoroethylene (PTFE) coated. The Kord line has a smaller press bed length than the Suprasetter. This design feature allows the Kord line to be more compact and save valuable floor space. This is very useful in a small to medium size print shop. There are several other differences in the design and materials. When the Suprasetter 74 was redesigned, the Kord line was basically a rebadged version of the newer Suprasetter 74. There are probably a few other new features on the Suprasetter 74 that are not present on the Kord line. Although this list is not exhaustive, the Suprasetter 74 and the Kord line are very similar in style and function.
