Note Most graphic design programs have layers that enable you to work with the layers of an image independently. Photoshop has similar functions. ## Moving a Layer and Making It Invisible When you move a layer, you simultaneously move its contents. Usually, this involves moving the individual elements that make up an image. For example, if the entire image — or a large area of an image — is being moved, the layers that cover the portion of the image that moves is, by default, turned transparent, revealing the layers behind it. Layers that are moved from left to right are transparent from left to right; layers that are moved from top to bottom are transparent from top to bottom. Photoshop provides the following options for moving a layer: * Simple *. Opens the Move tool and selects the layer to move; then you can select a destination for the layer. Photoshop moves the layer, keeping the rest of the image intact. * Move *. Opens the Move tool and selects the layer to move; then you can select a destination for the layer. You can apply the Move tool to a selection that surrounds an object to relocate that object. Alternatively, you can select the object and then move it. You can also duplicate the object, move the layer, and paste it onto a new location in the image (Moving or Laying Down Layers). One way to work is to select an object on your image and move it to a new location. A good approach for moving elements on your image is to use

Cancer screening in older adults in general practice. To determine the extent to which general practitioners screen older adults for cancers, and the screening practices of those who do screen. Cross-sectional population-based survey. Seven general practices in the Adelaide region of South Australia. 207 patients aged 60 years and over, or patients dying in the week before interview. Screening procedures, cancer-related problems reported and the estimated cost of the cancer-related problems. Three-quarters of patients aged 65 years and over, and half of those aged 80 years and over, reported being screened in the preceding two years for colorectal cancer, cervical cancer, skin cancer, breast cancer, lung cancer, prostate cancer, skin melanoma and bladder cancer. Screening was more common in younger than in older patients. General practitioners frequently reported interventions to prevent or detect cancer-related problems, such as examination of the skin, and record keeping and referral systems. There was no evidence that participation in a screening programme influenced the perceived need for, or the screening uptake of, these services. The costs of cancer-related problems were high. General practitioners in this community-based study screened their older patients for several cancers. Efforts to encourage screening participation among this elderly population would increase uptake of services and reduce the burden of disease. The state has invested $25 million in cash or debt in next year's budget, and more is planned, under the guidelines Gov. Jerry Brown and his revenue watchdogs outlined Wednesday. The budget deals with issues ranging from state firefighting to healthcare for the homeless, more funds for college scholarships, and money for the California Arts Council, the Reentry Program and the Health Workers for Health Equity initiative. The administration has also taken on some of the more arcane parts of government, turning over child-support collections to private contractors, or consulting the U.S. Department of Homeland Security for help on fire-prevention measures. The governor proposed a 5 percent funding boost for some state agencies under a formula that was added as a major state policy shift in December. But the main emphasis of the new budget plan remains on what the administration terms Brown's "Plan B" — redirecting money that has been held up in court for high-cost appellate litigation against the budget cuts Brown implemented last year. On Wednesday, Brown pointed out the cap-and-trade program and the cap on gas-guzzling trucks as areas where Californians are receiving relief after the 2011-12 state budget cut $2 billion. The "truck relief" has been replaced with money for an "Alternative Fuel Assistance Program" that will pay up to $100 for a covered truck that runs on compressed natural gas. The program will be reviewed in October to determine whether it still should be funded in the 2014-15 budget. "If the numbers are right, it's money well spent," said Brown, as the cap-and-trade program faces a possible legal challenge from the Western Center on Law and Poverty. Brown's transportation department has been directed to expand an electronic toll program with new technology that will replace cash when cars begin paying tolls on all major roads entering Los Angeles. He also plans to boost the four-year-old program by $24 million. The cash payments into the state's education programs would go toward scholarships for college and UC or CSU students, as well as for students in schools operating at 100% of capacity. Brown said he supports the governor's 2014 budget proposal to redirect $15 million of the state's cap-and-trade revenue to education from criminal justice. The state is currently using
