On 26 July, the EU's top court will rule on whether or not the framework of the so-called "Copyright Directive" – a leaked draft version of the "Copyright Directive" – is compatible with EU law. The aim of the European Union's "Copyright Directive" is to strengthen copyright across the EU. When it enters into force, it will bring copyright law closer to the way it works in the United States. What is the "Copyright Directive"? The final text is not yet available, but it was published in April 2019. According to the European Parliament, the Directive is intended "to ensure fundamental rights and to improve the EU's fight against counterfeiting, piracy and infringement of the rights of authors, performers and right holders”. Essentially, the Directive is meant to update copyright law so that it does not require new exceptions, which means that certain Internet-based service providers will be forced to block access to certain content, or face an infringement of EU copyright. In other words, the main thrust of the Directive is to allow certain rights-holders to hold Internet-based service providers such as Google, Netflix or Facebook accountable. The Directive is supposed to ensure that these service providers can't filter the Internet, as it would mean that they

Q: Oracle select largest n in joins I have a query that I'm trying to come up with. The table structure is as follows: Person ( name ) Make ( name ) Model ( name ) There can be multiple copies of each row, and each row belongs to a person that owns it, but there are only one row per make. The data is the exact same for each row, but there are different names in the name column in each row. I need to select the person whose row has the largest number of rows for each make. So if there is one row for "Ferrari" and two rows for "Honda", I need the person. I tried this: select person from ( select person, max(row_number) num_rows from ( select row_number() over (partition by person order by model) row_number from ( select name, make
