What's New in the FileShark?

===== FileShark is an easy-to-use utility that will clean your computer of orphaned files created with CAD software. It is a great way to check whether your current computer setup can be used to create CAD models. If you are not a CAD user, it is a great way to create a clean working environment, and remove all excess files and registry leftovers by CAD software such as SolidWorks, Pro/ENGINEER, and others.

The state's highest court ruled Monday that Jerry Brown's climate change plan is unconstitutional and must be revised. In a stunning decision, the California Supreme Court declared the California Global Warming Solutions Act of 2006, a state initiative passed in 2006, to be unconstitutional. The court, however, has a month to revise the law, although it hasn't yet said how it plans to do so. Brown's climate change plan was originally approved in 2006 as an initiative by voters but was later approved by the Legislature, the State Water Resources Control Board and Brown's signature. Brown had been sued in 2011 by oil companies and others, who said the initiative was unconstitutional because it doesn't allow for new oil extraction. The Supreme Court made the decision unanimous and issued a strong rebuke of Brown's climate change plan, calling it "radical" and warning that its approval "will likely have profound consequences for the state's economy and for the future of this planet." The court ordered the state to come up with new legislation within a year to replace the initiative. But it remains unclear how that will happen. "The court has a broad mandate to rewrite the initiative and is charged with choosing the constitutional approach that will do the least harm," said David Loy, a professor at UC Berkeley School of Law and a former state attorney general. The court's ruling was greeted with approval from opponents of the initiative. "Clearly today's decision proves the citizens of California spoke up, when they decided to amend the state constitution to protect the public interest in limiting the emission of greenhouse gases," said Fiona Ma, the executive director of the Sustainable Energy and Economic Development Coalition. "The action of the California Supreme Court will have a significant impact on the global effort to combat climate change," said Mark Murray, director of the Natural Resources Defense Council's California office.
