Scheer says the Liberal government's decision to increase the federal carbon price on Jan. 1 is a "tax grab on Canadians." Scheer's campaign says the NDP and Liberals made deals to get a carbon price introduced, and the Conservatives' opponent was not part of those conversations. "We are the only party who will fight against a carbon tax," Scheer said Monday. The Liberals introduced a price on pollution during their first mandate in 2015, but scrapped the plan in January, saying the federal price would go too high. The current federal price is $10 per tonne. Under the Liberals, provinces could set their own minimum price if they wanted to. Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and New Brunswick had already indicated they were considering doing so. Conservative Leader Andrew Scheer said a carbon tax is a "tax grab on Canadians" and pledged to scrap the tax if elected leader of the official opposition. 1:26 In a speech to supporters in British Columbia on Monday, New Democrat Leader Jagmeet Singh said his party wasn't part of the discussions about the carbon tax in 2015. "What I want to make very clear today is that we will not support a federal carbon tax," Singh said. Singh said there's still a federal carbon price because the provinces and territories can impose their own taxes on the fuel. He said his party would fight to make sure provinces don't have an unfair advantage by allowing them to charge higher prices. Still, Singh is prepared to work with the federal government, he said. "If they put something forward we'll work with them," Singh said. "But what we're saying is: 'Our price is our price.'" Conservative Leader Andrew Scheer vowed to scrap the carbon price if elected leader of the official opposition. (Fred Chartrand/Canadian Press) Not a good deal for consumers, Trudeau says The Liberals have called the carbon tax a progressive measure that will benefit all Canadians.
